This tweet is about the argument people make. The argument is not completely off-base. And it's very well developed in the WSJ piece.

Her argument is that anything she doesn't like is communism. That's not entirely off base?

Anybody just want to get on a Zoom (or probably not a Zoom, since they might report/censor us) and just rage and complain right now? That's about where I am with this week and this website. If we weren't in lockdown it'd be a "put the world to rights in a seedy bar" sort of night

Lord, grant me the confidence of the young man whom I've literally never met in my life, but who went to an Ivy League school and emailed me requesting that I "let him know when we can schedule a Zoom call to help build out his DC network."

Ahead of election, Poland's incumbent president cries "fake news" at papers covering his anti-LGBT campaign tirades.

This, from the candidate of a party that uses domestic bots and troll farms to influence the country's online discourse. Rich.

Hundreds of Russians are facing prosecution for spreading "fake news" about the pandemic online. In several cases, police have published videos from suspects' interrogations in which they confess to and repent of their crimes.

Getting a COVID test today after protesting last weekend and a thing I did not know is: ideally you shouldn't eat or drink for 5 hours before your test.

As a serial snacker and highly dependent coffee drinker, I am afraid of what the next 4 hours 40 minutes hold 😬

Ahead of election, Poland's incumbent president cries "fake news" at papers covering his anti-LGBT campaign tirades.

This, from the candidate of a party that uses domestic bots and troll farms to influence the country's online discourse. Rich.

I've been seeing worrisome trends in Facebook Groups since 2018, and the dreck they spread has only gotten worse during the last few months of pandemic and protest.

Very pleased to share a byline with @CindyOtis in @WIRED to shed light on this problem.

Getting a COVID test today after protesting last weekend and a thing I did not know is: ideally you shouldn't eat or drink for 5 hours before your test.

As a serial snacker and highly dependent coffee drinker, I am afraid of what the next 4 hours 40 minutes hold 😬

That's one reason among many to take this thing less-than-seriously. Anyone reporting on this must confront the idea that Sec. 230 protects far more than FB and Google. It protects AT&T, Comcast, etc. Bit lobbyists. It also helps conservatives. Congress gets this.

the one its Soviet predecessor waged.

Unlike Soviet propaganda, which sought to promote a specific, communist-centric worldview, the Kremlin divides and deceives populations around the world with one goal in mind, the destruction of Western democracy as we know it. Russian deceptions exploit fissures in targeted societies to sow doubt, distrust, discontent and to further divide populations and their governments. The ultimate goal is to undermine democracy—and, in particular, the American variety, that Reagan era "shining city on a hill" and drive citizens to disengage. When we stop debating and protesting, stop critically engaging with the news, stop holding government accountable, and stop making our voices heard at the ballot box, the Kremlin has achieved its goal. In a backward way, this gives Russian President Vladimir Putin a seat at the proverbial negotiating table; if the most powerful countries in the world are having trouble functioning, busy with their own issues, Russia's status improves. More importantly, Putin gains a comparative advantage, particularly at home. "Look," he can say when Russians complain about the quality of life in their

Maybe that's the problem, some may feel uncomfortable when they see they don't have total control of people

Few specifics makes it look even more like a publicity stunt on Duda's behalf, and a misstep for US diplomacy

> Joanna Plucinska @joannaplucinska
> No big agreement signed between Presidents Duda and Trump at the White House today, including no defense cooperation deal or substantive update to where the "Fort Trump" talks are going. The focus was seemingly rather on energy cooperation, but still few specifics.

Even though #Poland stands to benefit as Trump sets up a shift of troops from Germany to its next door neighbor, Duda knows this is a bad decision and knows that Polish security is not independent of German/NATO security. Trump too focused on punishing Germans.

> Vivian Salama @vmsalama
> Poland's President Duda, speaking at the White House said the withdrawal of US forces from Germany would be "very detrimental to European security" and he asked that the US consider maintaining its longterm presence in Europe.

So it looks like the Russian bounty intel was in the President's Daily Brief. So when the WH said Trump & Pence had not been briefed, they're lying OR Trump/Pence didn't read it OR they had not been orally briefed (which would be a major indictment of O'Brien & Grenell). All bad.

Reminder: Trump wants to invite Russia back to the G7 even though the circumstances of its suspension (illegal annexation of Crimea) have not changed.

Trump also wanted to reverse sanctions on Russia- Congress had to codify them to stop this.

He is not "tough" on Russia.

Poland's presidential election heads to a run-off.

Wojciech Kość @WojciechKosc
In their reaction speeches, Duda played courteous but Trzaskowski launched an immediate attack and outlining what he thought the main issues will be: to combat manipulation, to fight for women's rights, to stand up to divisions.

Much will depend on turnout and flow of votes from minor candidates in 2nd round. How many Hołownia or Biedroń voters will come out to vote for Trzaskowski. Will Bosak voters be convinced by Duda? What about those who didn't vote in 1st round? Big 2 weeks of campaigning ahead. 2/

... things that are seemingly obviously not in his interests?

The "illegal annexation of Crimea"? The "unprovoked shootdown of MH-17"? The "paying of bounties to kill US soldiers in Afghanistan"?

The answer is, of course, that Putin doesn't do all of these things—and rather, they are creations of Western intelligence agencies and their respective surrogates in the media.

Crimea voted overwhelmingly to become part of Russia. MH-17 was shot down by anti-Russia Ukrainian rebel forces. The story of "Russian bounties" is a creation of MI6, aimed at hurting President Trump.

In most of the others, voters have to request a mail ballot, just like POTUS, the VP, and many WH staff do. That's true in swing states like AZ, FL, GA, IA, MI, MN, NV, NM, NC, OH, PA, VA, and WI. /2

So whatever POTUS and his campaign wants to call it, mail voters in all of the above states are doing it just like POTUS does. If he wants to complain about the results in UT, where they mail ballots to all reg'd voters, I suggest he takes that up with the R Lt. Gov. of the state.

I often wonder what would happen without people like Brandy on this beat. Hard to imagine people would care even less, but here we still are, underpaid reporters and researchers, pointing out the failings of multi billion dollar companies

Brandy Zadrozny @BrandyZadrozny

I and others have reported so many stories about the harm FB can do to regular folks, babies, democracies. The stories have been among the most widely-read at the shops I was at. And still, no one with the ability to change things cared for so so long. nbcnews.com/tech/social-me...

Guys like you love meaningless, empty cliches, don't you?

Speaking as an American in the time of most heightened political polarization in memory, I don't think it's a meaningless cliche to want to unite a divided country! I find that sentiment very compelling. And clearly at least 30% of Poles do too

None of this happened in a vacuum. One can debate different US administration policies over the years that may have unintentionally fostered his increased recklessness. But no US President, through his actions, has so consistently benefited Putin the way Trump has. 2/3)

That Putin's "coronation" will occur just as Americans are digesting reports of Russian bounties on US soldiers- with no US action taken to stop or punish Putin, is as stinging an indictment on Trump, as it is on the Russian Duma. Let's just hope Trump doesn't congratulate. (3/3)

Nina Jankowicz's @wiczipedia book is a must-read to understand the breadth and scope of Russia's disinformation operations in eastern Europe (testing ground for its ops in the west) -- particularly in an election year. Check out her book, as well as our book talk THIS THURSDAY!

There are 123 days until Election Day and there is still no basis for the conspiracy theory that "Mail-In Ballots will lead to massive electoral fraud and a rigged 2020 Election."

@washingtonpost's @pbump puts it well:

> Yes, some fraud occurs, but that doesn't mean that it occurs widely, much less without detection.
> This is an important distinction, so it's worth reiterating. It is the case that your car could be stolen. Auto theft exists. There are even local gangs who steal cars regularly and sell them for parts. It is not the case, though, that there exists a national ring of car thieves who operate without detection, purloining and selling millions of cars a year. That auto theft exists does not strengthen the argument that auto theft exists at a scale in which the system of auto ownership is imperiled.

Thanks to the coordinated placement of this forgery on a vast network of Prigozhin-controlled websites, we have now expanded our understanding of his fake news empire. Very useful for our ongoing investigation, more details of that soon.

I can't get over how dumb and petty Russia's diplomats are.

Prigozhin's trolls made some really bad fake DMs, exposed a huge part of their network in sharing it simultaneously, then the @mfa_russia (the actual, real account!) retweeted materials from it. Troll country.

> Bellingcat @bellingcat
> Obviously, these DMs are fake. We assume that the Russian troll factory (RIA FAN) is publishing some story with other fake DMs soon, judging by the watermark in the photos.

RIA FAN is the actual, literal Petersburg troll factory ran by Prigozhin

Polyanskiy is Russia's first deputy rep to the UN (lol)

He should have gone with #bellingscat instead of #bellingcraps, which is awkward.

in their Facebook messages. Clayton recalled saying, "Hell yeah, I want free advertising!" But there was a hitch; in order to advertise the event, the group offering the ads needed to be made an administrator of the event page. Clayton hesitated, albeit only a little. "I remember thinking, 'What's the group? It's not like, 'Politicians for Killing Puppies' or something?'" He thought it had the word "resistance" in it in some form. Given that "most progressive organizations function in operational poverty," the group decided they

Yet this is a very weak example. Something was going to happen and it maybe was amplified by a third party advertisement. Where is the data?

Eric Blair @protecttruth · 4h

The Russians didn't care about the ads or this particular protest, it seems. What has much more value to them is personal data on the activists. They used the ads to get admin access to the Facebook group. No? This is what the story says

Ben Avi @BenAvi46165416 · 29m

Having admin access also allows the perp to manipulate the info on the page in non overt ways - a subtle word or suggestive phrase to alter the tenor of the message - perhaps toward a more acrimonious demonstration. These folks get paid to study the efficacy of their tactics

It's very possible StopFake does not know, or was not involved w/ this decision at Facebook, or that it was not a decision made by a human at all.

Whatever the case, it shows the problems with Facebook's fact-checking program. But that does not excuse attacking a journalist.

I lost an eye when I was 10 years old. So, I only know driving without depth perception. Strangely, I find driving much easier than pouring things into cups (have to bring them into contact with each other - definitely not recommended or needed for driving).

What's important? They had their own domestic audiences in their sights.

Overall, I'm encouraged by this development and hope that Facebook will increase the scale of this work as well as speed up response time. That's always the rub, of course, especially when we have an extraordinarily consequential election in five months.

It is depressing to see that it took more than a year for them to come down, particularly because so many of us were sounding the alarm bell 12+ months ago, but I'm glad that Facebook is honing in on this type of activity. Here's why:

Overall, I'm encouraged by this development and hope that Facebook will increase the scale of this work as well as speed up response time. That's always the rub, of course, especially when we have an extraordinarily consequential election in five months.

Two of the networks FB took down today were run by professional agencies, continuing the social-media-manipulation-for-hire trend we wrote about earlier this year.

The other two networks are attributed to Roger Stone and Brazil president Jair Bolsonaro.

Many electronic voting machines (and other parts of our election infrastructure) have known security weaknesses, and that's a real problem. But that does not mean that elections are "rigged". Voting still matters.

Exaggerating the problem is unhelpful and irresponsible. Stop it.

Perhaps @Etsy (where this mask is being sold) and others should ban these mesh masks since they're obviously being used to skirt health guidance. Just a thought.

The other striking thing about this to me was the amount of money spent.

Between the four networks, over $3.5mil was spent on Facebook ads. Most of it came from the two networks associated with PR firms.

2 2 19

Jane Lytvynenko @JaneLytv

Last thing: It would be useful if Facebook created a catalogue of content promoted by these networks so we can better understand them.

Right now we're getting a sampling of screenshots most of which are low engagement. Ones for the Stone network were from 2016. Not too handy.

As a researcher I would really appreciate such a resource. But then, what's the best way to prevent misuse by people who will just repurpose the content etc etc? There will always be plenty of targets who aren't aware of such a catalog/resource. Genuinely conflicted 🤷‍♂️

I am shocked & appalled. The foreign journalists who work at USAGM are its lifeblood, providing its linguistic, cultural, & subject matter expertise. They are passionate advocates for freedom of speech. They uproot their lives and move to the US in service of that dedication.

There are 116 days until Election Day; studies still show mail-in ballot fraud is infinitesimally rare; and there is still no basis for the conspiracy theory that #VoteByMail will corrupt the election.

This is so important. America's speedy election results are a dangerous anomaly. In all the elections I've observed abroad, we stay with precinct captains until every ballot is counted- usually by hand!- until the wee hours of the morning. No one clamors for results sooner.

While I've called for @Facebook to halt political ads until there are effective regulations for online ads, changing its tune this close to the election is also problematic. This is the kind of thing they should have done long ago - doing so now may just create more chaos.

Another great episode. One minor point re: VK and OK access, despite the bans. I think a lot of Ukrainians get around them with VPNs. I still see my former students, most of whom still live in Ukraine, periodically posting there, and I even saw this during the Poroshenko admin.

But was the US cyberattack on the IRA ahead of the 2018 midterms effective? I would wager minimally so. Elections are inflection points in disinformation campaigns, not end goals. The IRA being offline for a few hours won't erase years of influence ops.

This is the Polish justice minister outlining his vision for the next phase of PiS rule in Poland: total control of the personal sphere, of the media, of the judiciary, of education and of the universities.
ruleoflaw.pl/the-united-rig …

"We have to protect the Polish family, we must protect Polish children against depravity, against manipulation, against everything that carries the danger of those bad civilisational elements that are imposed on us by the liberal Western world controlled by the left," Ziobro told TV Trwam.

He spoke about what the right must do to "save Poland from corruption" (we're reporting on the interview with Ziobro based on the link on Radio Maryja's website):

"We are facing a huge challenge. If we don't do it now, if we don't deal with education, if we don't deal with the sphere of teaching at universities, if we don't deal with the media, we'll lose the battle for Polish souls.

Nina what's the deal with the Oxford comma in the book subtitle? In my copy it's there: "Russia, Fake News, and ..." But on the Amazon image of the book cover it's not. Were there interesting & violent & time-consuming fights over this? I'd pay more money for that entertainment

No system is ever 100% secure. Even password managers suffer data breaches! But you can take steps like multifactor authentication (e.g., using a security key or adding a phone number for password resets) to secure your accounts as much as possible.

Super interesting polling data from KIIS/Levada on MH17 blame. In particular, the change in Ukraine air force --> missile in 5 years in Crimea, and of people who actually answered the question in the LDNR, most still say responsibility is with Russia/DNR. washingtonpost.com/politics/2020/ ...

A basic understanding of contemporary intelligence and Russian tradecraft since ~1917 would enable one to see this is a gargantuanly bad take. The Russians were always going to target vaccine research, American or otherwise, for intelligence collection. Deterrence is irrelevant.

Russia likely would sought vaccine IP under any president, yes, but any other president wouldn't have allowed Russia to operate with impunity in the cyber, information, and physical space over the last four years. This is indefensible, whether you think deterrence works or not.

A little news: Today the D.C. Board of Elections signed off on a plan for the Nov. 3 general election, which will include sending a ballot to every registered voter in D.C. and opening 40 vote centers for early and day-of voting.

There was a general consensus that sending ballots directly to voters using a mail house would work better than during the June 2 primary, when voters had to request a ballot and the elections board sent them out.

2 1 10

Martin Austermuhle @maustermuhle 18m
The mail house will enable better tracking of ballots, which was one huge complaint during the June 2 primary: clunky in-house technology made it very hard to know if the ballot you mailed in had been received and counted.

Martin Austermuhle @maustermuhle 16m
As for in-person voting, the elections board said opening the usual 144 precincts just wouldn't be possible, both because of staffing (many poll workers are elderly) and because of locations (if churches aren't even hosting services would they be available for voting?).

Martin Austermuhle @maustermuhle 15m
There was also a recognition that the 20 vote centers used during the June 2 primary wasn't enough, so the elections board will double the number and

.@CISAKrebs talked today about how difficult it would be for a foreign power to counterfeit paper ballots. Fiona Hill asked him about mail-in voting dangers and he referenced the "complexities" of 2200 potential ballot configurations at just 1 location in last month's KY primary.

"I think that shows the complexity of a foreign adversary in particular - first off getting special card stock, or paper, from a very small number of vendors that know their customers very well and if it shows up as, you know, the order coming from St. Petersburg and paying in rubles that might not clear the smell test. And then understanding the different configurations of the ballots ... printing them out the right way, getting the right signatures which get checked on the back end and that's one of those methods of validating or ensuring."

Of course Pres. Trump has repeatedly talked about mail-in ballots leading to a "rigged election." AG Barr told Breitbart "it absolutely opens the flood gates to fraud ... Right now, a foreign country could print up tens of thousands of counterfeit ballots."

Cool cool. But they don't have to look real this year. They have to look fake so Trump can say fakes are out there. It's the headlines that'll count more than actually faking votes. Trump needs a storyline to create chaos.

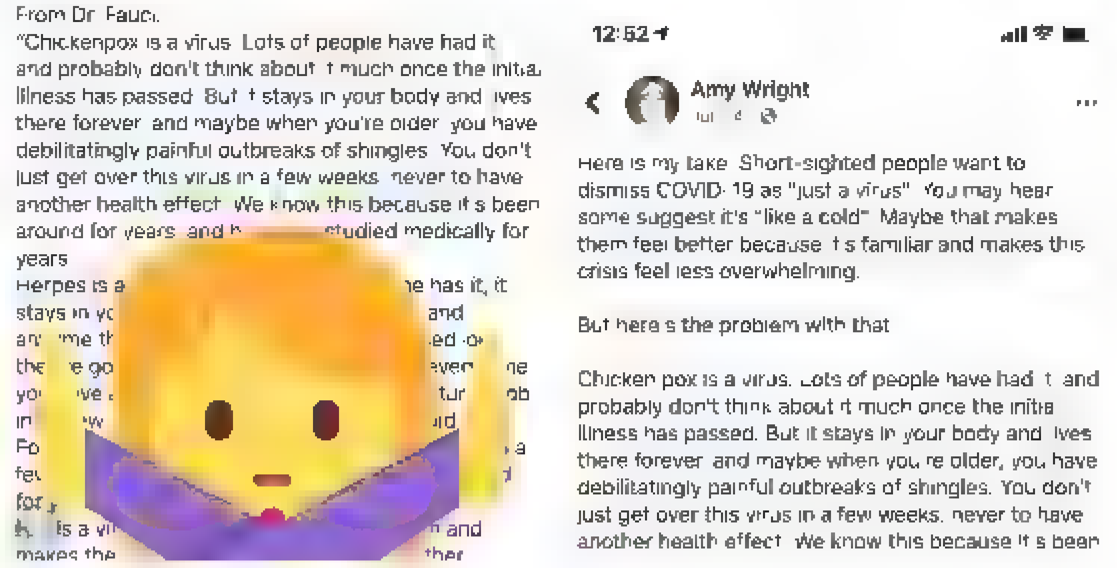
Be careful with these "copy & paste" statuses, and if you're going to share them, do a little bit of work to confirm what they assert.



From Dr Fauci:
"Chickenpox is a virus. Lots of people have had it and probably don't think about it much once the initial illness has passed. But it stays in your body and lives there forever, and maybe when you're older, you have debilitatingly painful outbreaks of shingles. Here is my take. Short-sighted people want to dismiss COVID-19 as "just a virus". You may hear some suggest it's "like a cold". Maybe that makes them feel better because it's familiar and makes this crisis feel less overwhelming.

But here's the problem with that.

This is a tactic that Russia and the Soviet Union used for decades. It was a key theme in Soviet films and art, and today the Russian government uses US treatment of media and protestors to excuse its own human rights issues. Our own polarization is our greatest vulnerability

Dear Director Wray:

We write to request that the Federal Bureau of Investigation provide a defensive counterintelligence briefing to all Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate regarding foreign efforts to interfere in the 2020 U.S. presidential election.

We are gravely concerned, in particular, that Congress appears to be the target of a concerted foreign interference campaign, which seeks to launder and amplify disinformation in order to influence congressional activity, public debate, and the presidential election in November.

Given the seriousness and specificity of these threats, as members of congressional leadership and the congressional intelligence committees we believe it is imperative that the FBI provide a classified defensive briefing to all Members of Congress and that the briefing draw on all source intelligence information and analysis, consistent with due regard for the protection of sensitive intelligence sources and methods.

Due to the ongoing nature of these threats, we ask that the FBI provide this briefing prior to the August recess at the earliest possible opportunity, and that your office outline a plan for the briefing by Monday, July [illegible].

We appreciate your prompt attention to this important request.

Sincerely,

Nancy Pelosi

On the importance of informing the public - despite politicization, UK looks to our reporting processes as a ones to emulate

#RussiaReport

(iii) Lack of retrospective assessment

47 We have not been provided with any post-referendum assessment of Russian attempts at interference, [5] This situation is in stark contrast to the US handling of allegations of Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election, where an intelligence community assessment[54] was produced within two months of the vote, with an unclassified summary being made public. Whilst the issues at stake in the EU referendum campaign are less clear-cut, it is nonetheless the Committee's view that the UK Intelligence Community should produce an analogous assessment of potential Russian interference in the EU referendum and that an unclassified summary of it be published.[55]

48  Even if the conclusion of any such assessment were that there was minimal interference, this would nonetheless represent a helpful reassurance to the public that the UK's democratic processes had remained relatively safe

Report is damning on the UK's failure to recognize the Russian disinformation/influence threat from 2014 onwards. I'd amend that to 2007, when UK allies across CEE region began raising the alarm.

Recommended reconfiguration of leadership to mitigate "hot potato" of dealing with influence campaigns in government

#RussiaReport

34 In our opinion, the operational role must sit primarily with MI5, in line with its statutory responsibility for "the protection of national security and, in particular, its protection against threats from espionage, terrorism and sabotage, from the activities of agents of foreign powers and from actions intended to overthrow or undermine parliamentary democracy ...".[38] The policy role should sit with the Office for Security and Counter-Terrorism (OSCT) – primarily due to its ten years of experience in countering the terrorist threat and its position working closely with MI5 within the central Government machinery. This would also have the advantage that the relationship built with social media companies to encourage them to co-operate in dealing with terrorist use of social media could be brought to bear against the hostile state threat; indeed, it is not clear to us why the Government is not already doing this.

DISINFORMATION AND INFLUENCE

27 The spreading of disinformation (by which we mean the promotion of intentionally false, distorting or distracting narratives) and the running of 'influence campaigns' are separate but interlinked subjects. An influence campaign in relation to an election, for example, may use the spreading of disinformation, but may also encompass other tactics such as illicit funding, disruption of electoral mechanics or direct attacks on one of the campaigns (such as 'hack and leak'). Equally, the spreading of disinformation is not necessarily aimed at influencing any individual outcome; it can simply have broad objectives around creating an atmosphere of distrust or otherwise fracturing society.[22]

Also very revealing. Despite Russia's destabilizing use of cyber and disinformation in the Baltic states, Ukraine and Georgia, it wasn't until they interfered in the U.S. elections that the British government realized the level of threat that Russia could pose

Whilst there appear to be increasing signs that others in Europe are taking the threat from Russia more seriously  there has clearly been less success in translating this into building public support for the UK's diplomatic approach to attribution and condemnation of Russia's cyber activities. In particular, we note that France does not appear to have publicly condemned Russian cyber activities, and it has been widely reported that other European governments, such as Austria and Italy, have appeared publicly to move closer to the Kremlin in the last few years.[144] We also note reporting that Israel  has welcomed Russian oligarchs and their investment, and has thus far been unwilling to challenge the Kremlin openly.[145]

DISINFORMATION AND INFLUENCE

27 The spreading of disinformation (by which we mean the promotion of intentionally false, distorting or distracting narratives) and the running of 'influence campaigns' are separate but interlinked subjects. An influence campaign in relation to an election, for example, may use the spreading of disinformation, but may also encompass other tactics such as illicit funding, disruption of electoral mechanics or direct attacks on one of the campaigns (such as 'hack and leak'). Equally, the spreading of disinformation is not necessarily aimed at influencing any individual outcome; it can simply have broad objectives around creating an atmosphere of distrust or otherwise fracturing society.[22]

One thing, IMO, is missing: a recognition of the necessity to look inward and repair fissures that Russia exploits in British society.

Four years. We've had four years of news reports & academic research & open source evidence. And the spooks didn't even cross-match the social media accounts! They literally don't even appear to have read the newspapers.

46. Whilst it may be true that some issues highlighted in open source did not require the secret investigative capabilities of the intelligence and security Agencies or were at the periphery of their remits, the Agencies nonetheless have capabilities which allow them to stand on the shoulders of open source coverage: for example, GCHQ might attempt to look behind the suspicious social media accounts which open source analysis has identified to uncover their true operators (and even disrupt their use), or SIS might specifically task an agent to provide information on the extent and nature of any Russian influence campaigns.[5] However, we have found  which suggests that *** ***

This would also have the advantage that the relationship built with social media companies to encourage them to co-operate in dealing with terrorist use of social media could be brought to bear against the hostile state threat; indeed, it is not clear to us why the Government is not already doing this.

Report is damning on the UK's failure to recognize the Russian disinformation/influence threat from 2014 onwards. I'd amend that to 2007, when UK allies across CEE region began raising the alarm.

Where can you read about this? My book ;)

One of the issues I have thought of personally is the fissures they exploit, in the US for example, they use US propaganda apparatus against us. Seems for the US to effectively fight, they would have to be transparent, earn trust, but would go against their own propaganda machine

Experhience @Experhience · 5h

How do you earn back the public's trust in government when the Western elite have themselves exploited that very trust through government to their benefit and not to the public's benefit?

IMO his influence on Putin is overemphasized. He may be a commander in the influence army but I don't think he's whispering to Putin, just like Prigozhin isn't. The Russian influence apparatus is much more disparate and spread out than many realize

On the level of law and punishment, there is no one to prosecute let alone an investigation into potential criminality. That again does not mean "it was a hoax" as farage states, or that there is no evidence it occured, as you claimed

Committee weighs in on why Russia targets the UK. I would add that especially since 2016 UK has filled the vaccuum of US's abdicated leadership role on Russia policy. #RussiaReport

Why the UK?

6. It appears that Russia considers the UK one of its top Western intelligence targets while we may not experience the level and type of threat that countries on Russia's borders suffer, witnesses have suggested that we would sit just behind the US and NATO in any priority list. This is likely to be related to the UK's close relationship with the US, and the fact that the UK is seen as central to the Western anti-Russian lobby.

7. This perception will have been reinforced by the UK's firm stance recently in response to Russian aggression: following the UK-led international response to the Salisbury attack – which saw an unprecedented 153 Russian intelligence officers and diplomats expelled from 29 countries and NATO – it appears to the Committee that Putin considers the UK to be a key diplomatic adversary. The threat to the UK – and any changes to this following the actions taken in response to the Salisbury attack – is described in this Report, together with the action that the UK Intelligence Community is taking to counter those threats.[2]

So really Facebook is just putting more context on all election-related posts, which is well and good, but let's not kid ourselves that it is "labeling" of the sort that Twitter is doing.

The country cannot compete on weaknesses (non-nuclear military size, cultural output, and economy). But it competes on strengths (cheaper hybrid warfare) in a new field of opportunity (the Internet).

See:

2 Russia is simultaneously both very strong and very weak. The strengths which Russia retains are largely its inheritances from the USSR and its status as a victor of the Second World War: nuclear weapons, a space presence and a permanent seat on the UN Security Council. By contrast, it has a small population compared with the West, a lack of both reliable partners and cultural influence outside the countries of the former USSR, a lack of strong public and democratic institutions, including the rule of law, and of course a weak economy.

3 Despite its economic weakness, it nonetheless heavily resources its intelligence services and armed forces, which are disproportionately large and powerful. Moreover

During the Cold War against the Soviet Union, the West used a strategy of containment. But I do not see any general, focused strategy at all today. That is what is most worrisome.

I think this is a key point in the #RussiaReport - Facebook told me when I was Chair of @commonsdcms they would only investigate illegal Russian election interference on their platform if there was evidence from intelligence reports to identify it.

The #RussiaReport suggests that the intelligence community isn't looking for evidence of Russian election interference. So it would seem that these select committee investigations are the only bodies that have tried to get answers to these important questions since 2016

40. Open source studies have pointed to the preponderance of pro-Brexit or anti-EU stories on RT and Sputnik, and the use of 'bots' and 'trolls', as evidence of Russian attempts to influence the process.[42] We have sought to establish whether there is secret intelligence which supported or built on these studies. In response to our request for written evidence at the outset of the Inquiry, MI5 initially provided just six lines of text. It stated that  before referring to academic studies.[43] This was noteworthy in terms of the way it was couched () and the reference to open source studies . The brevity was also, to us, again,

Recommended reconfiguration of leadership to mitigate "hot potato" of dealing with influence campaigns in government

34 In our opinion, the operational role must sit primarily with MI5, in line with its statutory responsibility for "the protection of national security and, in particular, its protection against threats from espionage, terrorism and sabotage, from the activities of agents of foreign powers and from actions intended to overthrow or undermine parliamentary democracy ...".[38] The policy role should sit with the Office for Security and Counter-Terrorism (OSCT) – primarily due to its ten years of experience in countering the terrorist threat and its position working closely with MI5 within the central Government machinery. This would also have the advantage that the relationship built with social media companies to encourage them to co-operate in dealing with terrorist use of social media could be brought to bear against the hostile state threat; indeed, it is not clear to us why the Government is not already doing this.

This move is both behavior based (against coordinated harassment of the types QAnon followers have been associated with) and topic based (against QAnon associated URLs and trending topics).

It recognizes the public safety risk these narratives pose.

It turns out the most effective approach is just not offering inside as an option

The lack of a "location" caption with Sky is the end result of several conversations where they ask me "which town are you in?" and I say "I'm not in a town" and it's all just too confusing.

Perhaps classified addendum to this letter explains how disinformation is being "laundered" via Congress; though determining the root source of disinfo spread/laundered through Members may not be so straightforward.

At this point, arguing, "this Congressman is spouting conspiracy theories being amplified by/sent to them by the Russians" may be a tougher sell since those conspiracy theories are coming from places like the White House, too.

Morning reminder that the best way to respond to misinformation is by sending good information in a private, empathetic note to spreaders.

(Thought of you @BostonJoan)

> Many have asked me about this video, and many have told me it was fake, it was a prop, it was made up, and that I was "fearmongering" by posting it. I've been called everything you can think of because I wouldn't take it down, and the reason I left it up is because I DO NOT cower to bullies, I NEVER will, and I gave my opinion based on my perspective of his gestures, and let everyone else have their own, as is MY right, and everyone else's. I've asked every single person to give me proof, and yet none have.
> So, today, I was finally given an insight as to the genesis of the video from someone who reached out to me through a private channel. And while it IS a reflection of the situation at the time I posted, I cannot, and will not, in good conscious, leave it up under false pretenses, without the explanation I was given and I apologize for posting without a more thorough understanding of its foundation and it will not happen again. Either way, no one who calls themselves a man should NEVER treat a woman like this, much less a girl. There is no excuse for that.

Important story by @ChristopherJM on the crimes Russia and the separatists it backs have committed in Ukraine.

This story discusses events in 2014, but Russia's war in Ukraine continues, claiming lives weekly.

In case you needed reminding the extent of Russia's involvement in and perpetuation of the war in Ukraine, look how it protects these criminals who carried out extrajudicial executions

On top of identifying the men, RFE/RL has found that one of them is tied through a Moscow-based organization for Russia-backed fighters to Vladislav Surkov, one of Russian President Vladimir Putin's closest aides at the time of the executions and the architect of the Kremlin's Ukraine policy. Another man is a senior military figure in the Russia-backed separatist forces in Donetsk. In addition, most of them appear to have been granted Russian passports and safe haven in either Russia or areas of Ukraine currently controlled by Moscow or by Russia-backed forces.

In case you needed reminding the extent of Russia's involvement in and perpetuation of the war in Ukraine, look how it protects these criminals who carried out extrajudicial executions

On top of identifying the men, RFE/RL has found that one of them is tied through a Moscow based organization for Russia backed fighters to Vladislav Surkov, one of Russian President Vladimir Putin's closest aides at the time of the executions and the architect of the Kremlin's Ukraine policy. Another man is a senior military figure in the Russia backed separatist forces in Donetsk. In addition, most of them appear to have been granted Russian passports and safe haven in either Russia or areas of Ukraine currently controlled by Moscow or by Russia-backed forces, effectively placing them under the protection of the Russian state and beyond the reach of Ukrainian and international law enforcement.

The only Twitter advice I have is that if someone attacks you and you decide to engage (fool), do not go more than two rounds in response. In Twitter, as in life, you must know when to leave the party.

I have broken this rule, just as I have stayed at parties too long. In both cases, I regretted that choice.

Gotta say, the feeling when someone reads your book and really gets what you tried to do is pretty amazing. Thanks, @JesseDamiani, for this lovely review.

"We all need to understand the threat we're up against; your first step is reading this book."

forbes.com/sites/jessedam ...

Likewise, for a broad, nebulous subject like disinformation, Jankowicz grounds the book in the personal, humanizing each interviewee—even those who contribute to "alternative" news. The effect is that otherwise abstract topics take on the intimacy of human conversation—subtly mirroring how governments and citizens must approach their attempts to curb disinformation efforts.

128 Others do not share the UK's concerns about Russia – or even if they do they are not willing to take such an assertive approach towards Russia's malign activities. Whilst there appear to be increasing signs that others in Europe are taking the threat from Russia more seriously  there has clearly been less success in translating this into building public support for the UK's diplomatic approach to attribution and condemnation of Russia's cyber activities. In particular, we note that France does not appear to have publicly condemned Russian cyber activities, and it has been widely reported that other European governments, such as Austria and Italy, have appeared publicly to move closer to the Kremlin in the last few years.[14] We also note reporting that Israel  has welcomed Russian oligarchs and their investment, and has thus far been unwilling to challenge the Kremlin openly.[14]

Overall I'd say this is thorough, clear-eyed, accessible report.

One thing, IMO, is missing: a recognition of the necessity to look inward and repair fissures that Russia exploits in British society.

Other parts of the @AOC speech worth noting: when she made it clear that a) the words did not hurt her or pierce her soul (thereby stripping them of power) and b) are the same words that men have used against her across context (so they're not brave or special)

5:10 AM · 25 Jul 2020

Dr. Danna Young @dannaga · 40m

There is a lot of focus on the other (admittedly brilliant) points raised about men with wives/ daughters not being inherently decent. But for me, the striking piece was her matter-of-fact discussion of the words as simultaneously aggressive yet ineffectual.

1 3 11

Dr. Danna Young @dannaga · 38m

This is a rhetorical feat, folks. Cause she's highlighting how these tactics are used to silence women and how they foster a culture of misogyny and violence against women, but also concedes that she herself was not "wounded" by the words.

1 2 16

Dr. Danna Young @dannaga · 36m

And by referencing how these words were often thrown at her in bars, it contextualizes them in terms of a lack of self control and inhibitions, which are seen as character flaws in public life.

Q has not “uncovered a lot of great stuff when it comes to Epstein and when it comes to the Deep State.” The Epstein reporting was by actual reporters at newspapers, bastardized by Q to fit a narrative about Satanic child cannibalism. Deeply irresponsible garbage by Fox News.

Zachary Petrizzo @ZTPetrizzo
Fox News' @JesseBWatters has some high words of praise for QAnon — which has been responsible for two murders, two child abductions, one terrorist incident, one church vandalism, one restaurant arson, etc.

With the election 100 days away, should we worry about another round of foreign political interference?

Two experts, @rosenbergerlm and @wiczipedia, on how Russia and China are approaching the US these days and how to fight disinformation more broadly:

CHAIR ELLEN L. WEINTRAUB
FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

Statement Regarding Illegal Contributions From Foreign Governments

June 13, 2019

Let me make something 100% clear to the American public and anyone running for public office: It is illegal for any person to solicit, accept, or receive anything of value from a foreign national in connection with a U.S. election.[1] This is not a novel concept. Electoral intervention from foreign governments has been considered unacceptable since the beginnings of our nation. Our Founding Fathers sounded the alarm about "foreign Interference, Intrigue, and Influence." They knew that when foreign governments seek to influence American politics, it is always to advance their own interests, not America's. Anyone who solicits or accepts foreign assistance risks being on the wrong end of a federal investigation. Any political campaign that receives an offer of a prohibited donation from a foreign source should report that offer to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

While we talk about COVID misinfo, it's worth noting that social platforms don't have a dedicated option for reporting health misinfo.

Twitter confirmed to me there is no way for users to report health misinfo, and there is no dedicated option on Facebook, Insta, and YouTube.

Facebook is no longer GOOD for the American brand. It's actively undermining it. It's providing a platform where extremism flourishes and demagoguery reigns. Regardless of the company's American Dream origins, its modern manifestation is thoroughly un-American.

Boy, denominators are a real pain, Zuck.

The entire problem is the identification of hate speech AT SCALE. Eliminating 89% of what you have identified before it's even flagged means NOTHING if you're only identifying 5% of what's out there.

I think Trump removing troops from Germany is a dumb idea. It's not strategic. It's obviously punitive.

I also don't view it as a "gift" to Putin.

I also think it's good to consistently revisit US troop numbers abroad, even in Europe.

All these things can be true at once.

This is the biggest litmus test for maintaining democracy we're going to get.

No pretending you haven't seen his tweet, no insisting he's kidding, no waffling.

If you enable the thought of delaying elections because of rumors and whims, you're enabling the end of democracy.

"Delay the Election": a classic authoritarian rallying cry.

Thankfully, Trump CANNOT "delay the election" on his own.

Here's why, from @KristenClarkeJD @vantaguptaCR @NormOrnstein @kareashaw1 @NedFoley @MariaTeresa1 & my other @ElectionTask colleagues static1.squarespace.com/static/5e70eb2

The Constitution gives CONGRESS the power to "determine the Time of chusing the Electors."

CONGRESS, in 3 USC 1, requires all states to appoint their electors on the Tuesday after the 1st Monday in November.

So, only CONGRESS can change that date--not the President alone.

And while I'm here: there is no evidence to support this foreign voter fraud claim. It would be extraordinarily difficult to pull off. Why do difficult when you can just keep drilling cheap disinformation at vulnerable populations, often using the President's own rhetoric?

> Mail-In Voting is already proving to be a catastrophic disaster. Even testing areas are way off. The Dems talk of foreign influence in voting, but they know that Mail-In Voting is an easy way for foreign countries to enter the race. Even beyond that, there's no accurate count!

Oregon has had 100% mail-in ballots for over 20 years. It has resulted in higher turnout with virtually zero fraud. This thread explains why — multiple layers of ballot-security measures. There is no reason other than partisanship/voter suppression not to support vote by mail.

There is a factual error in this story that we need to discuss as researchers.

White supremacists didn't "learn from Russia." In fact, US groups have long used the affordances of social media to impersonate activists, journalists, educators, and others.

That's a hard line to police. VOA has a command structure that stretches directly into the executive branch, a charter to serve US policy, and no independent source of funding. Structurally (though not in content), it resembles Sputnik/RT. The BBC (or NPR) do not.

While I have a lot of reservations about the current happenings at USAGM under Michael Pack, the journalists I know who work there are are not under orders regarding the tone or content of their stories. That's the key difference and why I think twitter's policy is correct.

Not to mention that right now, RFE journalists are providing some of the only local coverage of the incredible protests happening in Belarus. They've been repeatedly arrested for doing their jobs and telling the truth. If that's what "supporting American policy" is, sign me up.

That's a hard line to police. VOA has a command structure that stretches directly into the executive branch, a charter to serve US policy, and no independent source of funding. Structurally (though not in content), it resembles Sputnik/RT. The BBC (or NPR) do not.

While I have a lot of reservations about the current happenings at USAGM under Michael Pack, the journalists I know who work there are are not under orders regarding the tone or content of their stories. That's the key difference and why I think twitter's policy is correct

Jakub Parusinski @j_parus 8m

Fair enough, but doesn't that seem incredibly subjective? "We know them so they're okay". That's less than IFCN verification, which has shown itself to be pretty flawed of late

I think it's a lot more complex than that. These outlets have journalistic standards that those labeled do not, and IMO that is clearly reflected in their journalism.

DNI Evanina issues new statement on foreign interference, specifically calling out efforts to smear Biden through bogus Ukraine investigation dni.gov/index.php/news ...

- RUSSIA – We assess that Russia is using a range of measures to primarily denigrate former Vice President Biden and what it sees as an anti-Russia "establishment." This is consistent with Moscow's public criticism of him when he was Vice President for his role in the Obama Administration's policies on Ukraine and its support for the anti-Putin opposition inside Russia. For example, pro-Russia Ukrainian parliamentarian Andriy Derkach is spreading claims about corruption – including through publicizing leaked phone calls – to undermine former Vice President Biden's candidacy and the Democratic Party. Some Kremlin-linked actors are also seeking to boost President Trump's candidacy on social media and Russian television.

Also important: main goals = increase discord and trust in democracy.

Critical: would be difficult to manipulate voting results at scale. Full stop. Can we finally stop the mail in ballot fraud disinformation now?

> Ahead of the 2020 U.S. elections, foreign states will continue to use covert and overt influence measures in their attempts to sway U.S. voters' preferences and perspectives, shift U.S. policies, increase discord in the United States, and undermine the American people's confidence in our democratic process. They may also seek to compromise our election infrastructure for a range of possible purposes, such as interfering with the voting process, stealing sensitive data, or calling into question the validity of the election results. However, it would be difficult for our adversaries to interfere with or manipulate voting results at scale.

Ukrainian President Zelensky, who Trump tried to pressure to open investigations into his political rival, with a rare public comment on the US election and election interference

Володимир Зеленський @ZelenskyyUa
Never under any circumstances it's acceptable to meddle in another country's sovereign elections. #Ukraine did not and will not allow itself to interfere in the elections and thus harm our trusting and sincere partnership with the #USA

Riot police still firing flash bangs, tear gas into crowds and beating protestors. Meanwhile, the Central Election Commission alleges that in all reporting precincts, Lukashenka has won.

While Ben is outraged that RFERL is providing a livestream of the protests in Minsk and around Belarus, state TV in Belarus was showing... a documentary about badgers. Decades ago he would have told everyone to just shut up and watch Swan Lake.

Next time you want to complain about censorship in the United States consider what actual censorship looks like. On a tense Election Day in Belarus:

> Franak Viačorka @franakviacorka
> That's it! Election Day in Belarus. Right now in central Minsk Facebook (incl. Messenger), YouTube, Instagram, WhatsApp, Viber are all blocked via mobile internet. Two major grassroots-driven platforms Онлайн-платформа

Every time we have a tech hearing on Capitol Hill we are forced to listen to unfounded claims about conservative censorship. My point is to show the lengths of censorship. Platforms enforcing terms of service is not censorship.

Information from #Belarus ian Telegram channels => in some cities in regions police does not want to attack people. On the contrary, in #Minsk police is highly brutal so far. Regional police does not have experience in after-election (if any serious at all) protests

Nearly 3am in Belarus. Lots of scenes of triumph - some precincts reporting real results, police siding with protestors - in regions.

Very violent and uncertain in Minsk, reports of one man killed by a police truck.

Crucial days ahead. Keep watching and amplifying.

Clashes are happening around Belarus, in more than 20 cities. Police brutally attack the people trying to gather to protests against the rigged election. The harshest crackdown is happening in Minsk. Police are using tear gas, light grenades, police dogs. Water cannons arrived

No statement yet on yesterday's "results" or violence from the US State Department or Embassy in Minsk; we've spent the last several years in a kind of rapprochement with the Lukashenka regime, reopening our embassy and pursuing closer economic ties

> Sam Greene @samagreene
> Western governments — preoccupied, brow-beaten and disunited as they are — are eerily silent. They cast wary eyes towards Moscow and Kyiv and want no part; they may also look inward and wonder, rightly, where they get off criticizing Minsk's use of force. /9

Poles have always been pretty supportive of Belarus- large diaspora, shared border and history. Poland has also invested heavily in Belarusian free media. Hungary has none of that, and combined w/ autocratic tendencies of the Orban govt there's just no motivation to speak out.

I'm quite dismayed at the lack of above-the-fold, top-of-the-hour coverage of Belarusian protests in Western press. I know there's a pandemic on, but that's part of the story here, and what makes this even more significant and fascinating.

Protestors gathered in small groups around Minsk, so riot police are coming to them by minibus, to beat and disperse these small, non-threatening crowds. Shameful behavior by the Belarusian authorities. #Belarus.

Not a "deeply concerned" to be found- @JoeBiden stands with those calling for a transparent and accurate vote count and the release of political prisoners in #Belarus.

(Leadership. Values. Remember those?)

citizens have a right to elect their leaders and have a say in their country's future. After suffering systematic repression for the past 26 years under the authoritarian regime of President Alexander Lukashenka, the people of Belarus are demanding their voices be heard.

After a presidential election marred by electoral fraud, citizens peacefully protesting to demand an accurate vote count are now being met with riot police using stun grenades, tear gas, and rubber bullets. The Lukashenka regime has cut internet access, arrested protesters and independent journalists, and tried to muzzle foreign observers. These are not the actions of a political leader confident that he has won a fairly conducted election. But thanks to brave citizens — journalists, activists, and ordinary people documenting these extraordinary events — we know the truth about the assaults on democracy being committed by the regime.

Americans take the US Postal Service for granted. Having lived in two countries where mail is chronically unreliable (to put it diplomatically), I do not.

Here are a few stories about my misadventures with mail in Russia and Ukraine

> Steve Inskeep @NPRinskeep
> Startling: Kimberly Karol, of postal service workers' union in Waterloo, Iowa, tells @noelking the USPS not only banned overtime, but is having sorting machines removed in her area: "That also hinders our ability to process mail." @NPR

The first time I lived in Russia, ten years ago, my then-boyfriend (now husband) sent me a Valentine's Day card. It never made it to me at my university address; eventually, it was sent back to him as undeliverable after more than two months of globe trotting.

I tried to send postcards; like many Russian state services the post office keeps a ridiculous schedule and it took me a few tries to find it open. Triumphant, I waited in line and asked for some international stamps, only to be told they weren't sold at that time/day.

Things were slightly better in Ukraine-the post office was a bit more predictable and Nova Poshta, Ukraine's UPS-type service, was fairly reliable. But even they had trouble delivering a package to an American neighbor's former exchange student.

When I was packing to leave Ukraine, I faced a conundrum with all the books I had acquired; they made my already full-to-bursting suitcases too heavy. I didn't want to entrust them to the post office, and private delivery service was going to cost hundreds.

Moral of the story: the USPS provides a public service. Affordable, reliable mail. Some people cannot afford UPS, DHL, or FedEx- USPS is the only option. It also reliably serves rural locations. And it will be important in delivering our votes this November. #SaveUSPS

Fewer videos coming out of #Belarus tonight, but reports on Telegram and from friends on the ground indicate that protestors are not being allowed to gather at all, even outside of the center; police immediately dispersing crowds, often arresting people, pulling them out of cars.

Kamala Harris was one of the co-sponsors of the recent Uighur Human Rights Policy Act. cfr.org/election2020/c...

As president, I would continue to support Ukraine and ensure the U.S. is unequivocal in affirming Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity. I would also prioritize working with the government of Ukraine to build out its military, strengthen its civil society, and combat corruption, while working closely with our European partners on a diplomatic solution. And unlike the current occupant of the White House, I will consistently stand up to Putin in defense of democratic values, human rights, and the international rule of law.

I think if we are actually enforcing FARA and doing this across the board for all foreign outlets it's not a bad thing necessarily; it's just greater transparency. But when we pick and choose which outlets need to comply it's problematic

#Belarus A spontaneous rally of solidarity is happening in #Minsk right now. A few hundred women wearing white clothes came out to demand their right to a peaceful protest. A police van arrived. People are forming human chains of solidarity in different neighbourhoods in the city

Here's what it was like for a journalist who was arrested in Belarus over the weekend. My quick translation of a public Facebook post by Stas Ivashkevich, a journalist in our network who was just, thankfully, released. Many others have not been so lucky.

Thank you for your support!

I was freed around 19:00 yesterday. The cops drove me on a minibus a few kilometres from the jail to Okrestsina street and let me go without my personal things that were confiscated during my arrest (passport, telephone, wallet, bank cards, cash, and keys). My lawyer who was trying to get them returned was first directed to various offices and then physically ejected from the jail.

I was tried on article 23.34 — participation in an unsanctioned activity. The judge refused to call witnesses — police officers who arrested me on the opposite side of the city as what was written in my protocol. The judge also declined to look at the videos on my cell phone, on which it was clear that at the moment of my arrest I was fulfilling my journalistic obligations. Other people arrested on this article were sentenced to 10-15 days in prison, but the judge appears to have accounted for my family situation — the fact that I take care of my young son — and let me off with a fine.

I was arrested at a voting location, where I was covering the announcement of the election results. When the location was closed, people started demanding that observers be allowed to count the votes, and I was filming this on my phone. The police started arresting people including myself, though I told them I was a journalist. At the time they were still making arrests more or less correctly, without beatings.

The cell in which I was held from August 9 … was meant to hold three people. There were 13 of us there (two were later hospitalised: one was beaten as he was arrested, another had lacerations on his legs from a grenade). In the two days we were held, we received one loaf of bread for the whole cell. Once they were taken to the yard and herded with rubber batons.

Now my camera operator Ivan Murauyou and researcher Siarzhuk Harasimovich, arrested in different parts of Minsk on August 11 and 10 respectively, are still under arrest. There's no information about them. As far as I know, Belsat journalists Tatiana Beleshova, Vitaliy Dubik, Maxim Shved, and Alena Shcherbinskaye are under arrest, with no available information about their location. They need the support and international journalistic solidarity. Journalists from other publications were also arrested, beaten, or wounded with rubber bullets. It seems that law enforcement are frequently going after journalists.

I'm continuing my journalistic work. Thank you again to all my friends in Belarus and abroad for your solidarity and support.

Good point. Where is the leverage of the EU on Minsk? And which EU countries would really want the EU to maximise that leverage? I'd like to know where our reserves of 'feck' would be... also for other purposes.

"US presence in minsk" that's not going to happen because 1. None of the presidential candidates are anti Russian and 2. Unless I'm missing something this isn't a choice between east and west! People are desperate for this to be like Ukraine but it isn't!

#Belarus. #Lukashenko is largely dismissing protests, trying to show that nothing extraordinary is happening, and that this dissent are organised from abroad. This strategy worked before. But the scale of current protests is too large,too unprecedented, hence possible scenarios:

1. More violence. It's dangerous, but also people will not accept it. 2. Dialogue. Previous experience shows that it's not acceptable for Lukashenko. 3. Waiting for this dissent to end with time. But the level of anger and mobilisation is too high at the moment, and it may grow Backed into a corner as his regime collapses, Lukashenko says he's considering asking Putin for help, because the popular uprising against him is "a threat not only to Belarus, but to the entire post-Soviet world." Will Putin respond? Watch this space.

Lithuania has shown true leadership on #Belarus. It hosted the opposition leader Tikhanovskaya, pushed for the EU meeting, plans a human chain from Vilnius to Minsk on Aug 23. Now, it's formidable FM @LinkeviciusL is the first EU official to call Lukashenko 'former president'

> Former president of #Belarus now asks Putin for help. Against whom? Against own people carrying flowers on the streets? It is really big foreign conspiracy to live in parallel world being ready to sacrifice everything.

Clearly Belarus' revolution is different to Ukraine's. But fair to say that Belarus' trajectory is a Russian national security question that will involve the same decision-makers. This revolution is not about Russia, but elections open door to those who could move country west

3 5 24

Andrew Roth @Andrew_Roth · 15m

Don't see how Belarus can give the same security guarantees that Armenia did. Tikhanovskaya has said she'll step aside in six months and hold new elections. Who would negotiate? And a guarantee may not be enough. Belarus is part of Russia's core abroad, it's on another level.

1 4 15

Andrew Roth @Andrew_Roth · 4m

The limiting factor for the Kremlin may be that it's just too late. Lukashenko is widely reviled, there's no obvious split in society to exploit, and no one wants Kremlin intervention. So Russia has limited options, but tying its fortunes to Lukashenko seems like a bad one.

Also it's not like Putin and Luka get along particularly well. In some ways I wonder if Putin would see a changing of the guard and new elections as an opportunity for broader, more reliable influence.

The rallies are taking place all over the country today. People are chanting "Freedom!", "Go Away!" "We believe! We can! We will win". Many did bring Belarus historical white-red-white flags prohibited by the current regime.

Every news organization seems to have a voting guide for the upcoming election. There are lots of outside organizations that have sites, too

Seems like a lot of duplication and potential for confusion when a state changes its laws/policies and the news does not propagate quickly

Your best information comes from state and local election officials. I wish I could say all of their sites are easy to navigate, but they aren't. Still, I recommend searching for local info. Each state is different, and sometimes even localities within states are different!

So, when the President criticizes "mail-in voting," which states – and I mean exactly which states – is he criticizing?

In large part, the crisis of truth and trust the United States finds itself in today is one of our own makings. Until our elected officials begin to once again respect the truth, it is up to us—at protests, in the voting booth—to remind them it exists. It would be easy—as in the dystopic scenario that closed this book—to check out, to seek entertainment instead of information, and to shirk our civic duties and democratic discourse entirely. But unless we aim to live in an autocracy, it is something we cannot allow. Impeachments are rare, elections are yearly.

It drew my attention to this misuse of "misinformation."

Disinformation=false or misleading information spread with malign intent

Misinformation=no malign intent

Ergo, anything that's an "operation" = DISinformation.

Precision of terms matters.

The Senate examined whether Russia had 'kompromat' on Trump.

"The committee sought, in a limited way, to understand the Russian government's collection of such information, not only because of the threat of a potential foreign influence operation, but also to explore the possibility of a misinformation operation targeting the integrity of the U.S. political process."

Are we going to hear certain GOP politicians retracting their baseless statements about Crowdstrike now that this bipartisan report concluded they were nonsense?

(Lost? See my November interview with @FareedZakaria for more info: cnn.com/videos/tv/2019 ...)

"The committee notes that using forensic images of compromised systems is standard protocol in cyber investigations, because it removes the chance that information on the compromised systems could be altered or deleted by mistake. ... Ultimately, the F.B.I. got what it needed, including the forensic images from CrowdStrike."

The president and his supporters have stoked conspiracy theories that the Russians were not responsible for hacking Democratic emails after all. They have suggested that there was something nefarious about the fact that the Democratic National Committee, working with the cybersecurity firm CrowdStrike, provided Hugely important point from Hanna. But will Belarusians tolerate this quiet intervention to keep the wheels of the state turning?

> Hanna Liubakova @HannaLiubakova
> #Belarus. What is missing, I believe, is that it won't be about the Russian army that could possibly intervene. #Russia can send specialists and experts, whenever state-owned companies and enterprises go on strike. It includes state television. It's easy,hard to prove, effective Navalny is not only Russia's leading opposition politician — he's also, in effect, one of the country's top investigative journalists.

His video investigations, which are always exceptionally produced to be clear and understandable to ordinary people, are exemplars of the genre

He follows the money, highlights unearned wealth, and explains how it all fits into the corrupt system Putin has built. He has enemies everywhere, and not just at the very top

Ilya Lozovsky @chbinilya 15s

That's why it's way too early to speculate about who may have poisoned him (if indeed he really was poisoned!).

Just please don't jump to "PUTIN DID THIS" without evidence. That's not always how things work, and this may indeed prove to be very awkward and tricky for Putin

Ilya Lozovsky @chbinilya 15s

In any case, very little is known so far. But we can all join many Russian citizens today in wishing him a speedy recovery and thinking of his family

Every political struggle will be unique while showing common threads. It takes absolutely nothing away from the immense bravery of the Belarusians to take them as inspiration for the struggle likely to be necessary in the US starting November 4. It's not a competition.

Whatever else, calling something a "kill switch", leading us to imagine Mark Zuckerberg - the ultimate decision-maker who answers to no one - with his hand on it, feels like a poor comms decision Helpful for highlighting the problem tho, so thanks!

Part of the solution is a clear policy set out beforehand, incl who they will consider authoritative sources, what triggers the switch, the process of decision-making & who is involved

And Zuck not taking calls from the President while thinking abt it

evelyn douek @evelyndouek
Not to be a boring procedural justice type, but I feel it's important that the phone call between the decision-maker and the subject of the decision during this "pretty thorough" decision-making process should not be retconned out of the story - it's not mentioned here

Yeah, requests for interference are usually covert, like Salvini's oil profits and several African leaders' dealings with Prigozhin

But there are a couple overt precedents, like Le Pen's requests for loans or Trump asking for hacked emails ("Russia, if you're listening...")

How should the West view Belarus, as it convulses in post-election chaos? What might Putin be thinking about it?

And what happened to Russian opposition leader @navalny?

My conversation w/ @wiczipedia, from today's show:

Awesome interview, ! Didn't have time to talk about zero response from the Congress and extremely subdued response from the . I know they are scared to death of Putin's reaction to any strong statement. Still, I think that would be worth mentioning on

As the Kremlin is pushing the world to take up its coronavirus vaccine, this is not exactly a great advertisement for Russian medicine.

Moscow was very proud of it being the first one to be approved, but at this rate it may go the way of its world-class cybersecurity company

Although I agree that Donald Trump's actions have been disastrous, this has more to do with police training and enforcement. However, politicians may also be involved. If USA is anything like India, where politicians can transfer and demote officers at their will.

You could def sub white or wine vinegar as well, I just like the bite of the ACV. The salad won't be sopping, so if you feel you need more kick you can drizzle a bit more vinegar on but I find it doesn't need it! 🙆‍♀️

Another key point.

I represent more federal workers than anyone in the House. Any of them could lose their jobs for violating the Hatch Act.

When the people leading their agencies break that law and the White House Chief of Staff says "nobody cares," it does a deep injustice.

The U.S. has some strong (if very creaky) democratic institutions, and they've largely held up so far. But this kind of slippage is very dangerous. It's journalists' responsibility to cover this clearly and intelligently, not whine about the public not caring

The misuse of administrative resources also goes hand in-hand with disinfo. I write about this in the Poland chapter of my book, when, stripped of its access to the Chancellery in the wake of the Smolensk disaster, the Law and Justice turned to more emotional campaign narratives.
twitter.com/ichbinilya/sta …

The first order of business, handed down from Acting President Komorowski himself, was to separate the upcoming electoral campaign from the resources of the state within the Chancellery. This mix of the political and official was fairly typical practice in Poland, Tomasz said, but the political climate meant the Komorowski administration wanted to separate the two. It should be clear to the public that no one in the organization—from former Kaczyński staffers to the new Komorowski group—was abusing administrative resources during this delicate period before the election. In the wake of the tragedy, the vote would now be held in the summer. Gruesome though it was, the political viability

I went through my calendar since March 16 and added up the amount of public facing outreach work I've done since then and it amounts to, conservatively, 131 hours aka 5+ 24-hour days full of talking at my computer.

That doesn't include the writing I've done since then.

It's amazing how their police are completely different from ours.

No weapon swinging, no punching the women. They actually backed off when some women surrounded a male protester.

This wouldn't work in the US.

Our wall of mom's got tear gassed and shot at.

Much love, Belarus.

My book concludes with a look into the dystopic future we might be met with if we continue the current policies in place to fight disinformation. Several of my predictions - including this one, about USAGM - are coming true earlier than I anticipated.

Trump won reelection and the deterioration of the American information ecosystem continued apace. The Republican Party—newly returned to a Congressional majority and eager to please the Trump voters that had put them in office—offered little resistance as the Trump administration's diatribes about the "fake news media" became government policy. They slashed funding for the Public Broadcasting Station and National Public Radio and set US foreign broadcasters such as Radio Free Europe, one of the only stable vectors America had in place to counter Russian influence abroad, on a path to extinction. For-profit journalism did not fare much

To sum up: malign actor took publicly available voter information, slapped it on the dark web, and (allegedly) defrauded the State Dept via the Rewards for Justice program. This generated a bunch of confusing analysis. Not a good day except maybe for the Russian who is $4k richer

You tweeted that it was "truly amazing that they duped the DOS," that's a pretty strong statement validating their claim. If there's one thing we have learned from 2016, it's that Bad Actors, exploit Blue checkmarks to promulgate bogus claims that support the latter's views

I spoke to one of the writers who was lured into a scheme by the IRA to try and influence Americans ahead of the vote. Here's what it feels like to suddenly find yourself in the middle of a Russian influence operation:

It will never become normal/acceptable that the US President says NOTHING about Navalny's poisoning, while all major western leaders speak out, condemning it.
Putin will do it again, and again. Where is the outrage, Republicans?

> Boris Johnson @BorisJohnson
> It's outrageous that a chemical weapon was used against Alexey Navalny. We have seen first-hand the deadly consequences of Novichok in the UK. The Russian government must now explain what happened to Mr Navalny – we will work with international partners to ensure justice is done.

Republicans have repeatedly demonstrated that they do not care about much of anything except packing courts with conservatives. I think that will cost them.

I agree with a lot of the steps that are in here — but advertising on platform is a piece of the disinformation puzzle not the focus — so let's stop distracting ourselves from the root problems.

Looking at the label Facebook just put on Trump's misleading post about voting. Nothing about this label tells me that what Trump said is wrong. It actually looks like Facebook is building off Trump's post and sending users somewhere to register to vote.

How is this helping?

There seems to be a coordinated detention of high profile opposition figures in #Belarus this morning. Awful news.

Putin and Lukashenka to meet this week.

Hanna Liubakova @HannaLiubakova

#Belarus. Maryia Kalesnikava was kidnapped by unknown men in the #Minsk city centre. Anton Radniankou, the Coordination Council spokesperson doesn't answer calls either

Alexei Navalny is out of a coma and responsive, his German doctors say, though they're not ruling out permanent damage from "severe poisoning" with a nerve agent.

If you missed it, here's our story on what he means for Russian investigative journalism.

That's not at all what the article says or what I've ever argued. In fact my book looks at the range of actions countries have taken to fight back, but the uniting factor among those successful is investing in building resilience in addition to direct policy & regulatory actions.

Trying to liven up the constant stream of doom On Here, and may I just say I'm so glad @... has some new music out? It's the perfect glimmer of hope for this era.

(Also, Sara, if you remember someone staring at you while you had tea in London in March, that was me.)

Is that really the point? Should we accept a hostile government trying to subvert our elections? How does our leaders being bad excuse foreign interference?

9 7 66

I don't think anyone whose work is discussed in the piece would make that argument (I know I wouldn't!). But mending our own societal vulnerabilities is perhaps the most important step we can take towards countering foreign interference

Just as a PSA: no one — literally no one — who believes in the efficacy of increased societal resilience in response to disinformation thinks we should sit back and allow bad actors to get away scot free. Yes, we must impose costs. But we need to do that while we look inward, too

The reason I so passionately and loudly advocate for resilience-building is because it is a generational effort and we have lost precious time debating whether foreign interference is actually A Thing.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 14s
Building our resilience narrows the attack surface so that adversaries like Russia, China or whoever comes for us next have less to work with. It's not a magic wand. But it has to be part of the solution

We must respond to disinformation in many ways, including by increasing resilience. We can both stop bad actors from doing bad things and empower people to protect themselves. It's going to take a lot of coordination (and elbow grease) but more straight forward than a man-on-moon

Complaint underlines how IRA plays both sides of the political spectrum, and how in the post election environment it switched to using Facebook Groups to get its messages out

27 Project Lakhta members also developed detailed analysis of timely news articles and guidance for how to describe the articles in social media posts to order to interfere with the United States political process. For example, in or around early August 2017, one co-conspirator, working under the guise of the Facebook group "Secured Borders," analyzed a large quantity of United States news articles, summarized the substance of the articles, and outlined ways for the conspiracy to promote them. Specifically, one or more co-conspirators described each article and categorized its theme, provided a strategic response with a particular focus on how to target United States audiences, and then noted approval to use the strategic response. The strategic response was referred to as "Tasking Specifics," which appeared to include an assignment to certain Project Lakhta members to disseminate the message on social media platforms.

Biegun: After being "clearly rejected by his own people," Lukashenko using security forces, Moscow to prop himself up. It confounds US how Moscow can back such a regime, such violence, as well as violations of freedom of assembly, speech. "Why would Moscow support such a regime?"

Biegun specifically condemned Belarusian authorities' targeting of journalists. Repeated reports suggest authorities have harassed, beaten reporters. "That has laid bare their blatant desire to limit free speech," etc.

Christopher Miller @ChristopherJM · 4m

Biegun: Where do we go from here? We are closely coordinating with allies. This includes sanctions. The US maintains sanctions on several individuals, including Lukashenko. And considering more. We call on Belarus authorities to accept OSCE offer to mediate the political crisis.

Of course, this is in no small part due some in the media's insistence on referring to RU's influence campaign as "election hacking," which is incredibly misleading. In 2016:
-no votes were changed
-what was hacked as party/camp emails
-majority of the activity wasn't hacking

Paying for placement is actually pretty common in the post Soviet space though. it isn't beyond the pale that they would think this is how all media operate. This also does exist in the US, it's just in the form of ads, sometimes full page, which look like actual news articles

One of the PeaceData personas, Bernadett Plaschil, cold emailed the submissions address at In These Times and just outright asked how much it would cost for them to place their articles on In These Times website. For anyone who works in media, this is an obviously bizarre pitch.

Not thin-skinned- making a point that overall we all need to take a little more time to respond and think who we are engaging with and why. I have been raising the alarm about this on a daily basis for years.

One of my favorite things about seeing friends & colleagues whose homes I've been to interviewed on TV or doing keynotes right now is knowing the effort they had to go to to get the room normally filled with kids or pets or kitchen stuff to look like a library on zoom 😂

These false antifa arson claims have had enough time to bake and spread and now they're flowing through hyper local, mostly private, FB groups. Facebook is trying, but it's just too late.

Many journalists didn't like my Kremlins thread.
So I will retract:
1. There are no "Kremlins" - I invented them. Maybe you heard of the movie.
2. Russia is not sending "little green monsters", has never done so ... I think.
3. Pictured is a balaclava. Not a monster eye.

Also, this touches on one of my pet peeves: the conflation of disinformation and cyber crime. There is already enough confusion about how disinfo works without conflating two related but separate trends.

4 4 16

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Sep 11

Of course, this is in no small part due some in the media's insistence on referring to RU's influence campaign as "election hacking," which is incredibly misleading. In 2016:

-no votes were changed

-what was hacked was party/camp emails

-majority of the activity wasn't hacking

I've brought up the effects this sort of policy has at multiple meetings w/ industry folks and there is always some sort of lame excuse, or worse, pointing to diversity metrics, which doesn't help if you're not directing & supporting those diverse populations to protect democracy

That power contrasted with what she said seemed to be a lack of desire from senior leadership to protect democratic processes in smaller countries. Facebook, Zhang said, prioritized regions including the US and Western Europe, and often only acted when she repeatedly pressed the issue publicly in comments on Workplace, the company's internal, employee-only message board.

Most of the world outside the West was effectively the Wild West with myself as the part-time dictator.

"With no oversight whatsoever, I was left in a situation where I was trusted with immense influence in my spare time," she wrote. "A manager on Strategic Response mused to myself that most of the world outside the West was effectively the Wild West with myself as the part-time dictator — he meant the statement as a compliment, but it illustrated the immense pressures upon me."

In other examples, Zhang revealed new information about a large-scale fake account network used to amplify and manipulate information about COVID-19, as well as a political influence operation that used fake accounts to influence 2018 elections in the US and Brazil. Some of these details were not previously disclosed by Facebook, suggesting the company's regular takedown announcements remain selective and incomplete.

This article is a good reminder that just because Facebook does press-friendly announcements of takedowns of malicious networks from time to time, there is no real mechanism to gauge how much of a grip the company has on its own infinitely vast platform.

In 2007-8 in Estonia and Georgia, members of the Kremlin-funded Nashi youth group participated in DDOS attacks, website defacement, and even attacked the Estonian ambassador to Russia outside her embassy.

I never expected that a US campaign would run a similar operation.

Important point on Russia's election interference: they're sowing discord, not targeting election infrastructure ⤵️

Sasha Ingber @SashaIngber
Wray says the IC agrees Russia is trying to influence the election through malign foreign influence: social media, use of proxies, state media, online journals, to sow divisiveness and denigrate as Biden. The targeting of election infrastructure, "we have not seen" yet.

FBI Director Wray just confirmed that Russia is continuing to influence U.S. elections through "malign foreign influence."

He notes that it is an effort to sow discord and it is an effort "primarily to denigrate Vice President Biden."

Lukashenka is really trying to make fetch happen with this "color revolution" thing; as a reminder- no EU flags at this protests, no demands for Euro-Atlantic integration. All Belarusians are asking for is for their votes to be counted and voices heard.
Christopher Miller @ChristopherJM
Lukashenko now says US, Poland, Lithuania, Czech Republic, "and, unfortunately, our Ukraine," are aggressor states trying to organize a "color revolution" in Belarus. He claims the US is controlling those four nations. belsat.eu/en/news/lukash via Removing harmful content from recommendations and amplification surfaces works. It takes the wind out of the sails of how this content propagates across Twitter.

These are encouraging results, and we're going to continue to invest in building out our approach.

Here's a little excerpt from my book where I describe the difference between Soviet propaganda and today's Russian influence efforts. You could make a similar comparison between Chinese and Russian goals.

(links to buy my book: wczipedia.com)

Unlike Soviet propaganda, which sought to promote a specific communist [illegible] worldview, the Kremlin divides and deceives populations around the world with [illegible] of Western [illegible] as we know it. Russia's deceptions exploit fissures in targeted societies to sow doubt, distrust, discontent, and to further divide populations and their governments. The ultimate goal is to undermine democracy—and, in particular, the American vision that Reagan's "shining city on a hill"—and drive citizens to disengage. When we stop debating and protesting, stop critically engaging with the news, stop holding governments accountable, and stop making our voices heard at the ballot box, the Kremlin has achieved its goal. In a backward way, this gives Russian President Vladimir Putin a seat at the proverbial negotiating table. If the most powerful countries in the world are having trouble functioning, busy with their own issues, Russia's status improves. More importantly, Putin gains a comparative advantage [illegible] at home [illegible] he can say when Russians complain about the quality of life in their country: it's not like democracies are handling themselves much

Saw "color revolution" used in a few memes while doing my normal monitoring on Facebook yesterday. Also shocked to see it used in a US context, referring to America... and how many Americans even know what it means? Whatever meaning it did have has been obliterated by this stunt.

Just wondering: has the Kremlin disinformation machine injected the color-revolution-against-Trump theme into the US right wing media ecosystem?

From what I can tell this isn't trickling over from overt propaganda like RT; seems to be more a symptom of conspiracy theory galaxy brain (Soros is also involved in this narrative, of course). Best performing content over the past few months comes from US outlets/commentators Always tough to distinguish "injected vs co-opted" narratives. We talk a lot about how "color revolution" is cynically used to cast blame on foreign boogeymen - much less on how it delegitimizes the collective voices of citizens. The latter, imo, is far more insidious.

Daniel Fried @AmbDanFried · 4m

True point re distinguishing between injected and cooped. But use of the term "color revolutions" (and obsession with it) seems natural for Kremlin disinformation but a stretch for US. Pros ... , DFRLab and ... might be able to do forensics.

They'd be looking at the very same data I'm looking at, which shows that Glenn Beck is doing more to further this narrative than any Russian outlet in the last twelve months ;)

Martial law contains provisions that could impede media and civil gatherings—but of course big question is whether it will force delay of March elections. Big question is indeed why now? Ukraine didn't introduce martial law in most acute moments of war over last four years

Whether Putin is personally "directing" the efforts or not, isn't the simple fact that it's a concerted, organized, years-long, state-backed effort the fundamental point?

Every so often it hits me: I work with amazing people. This unique situation has only solidified that fact.

It's equally important to note that the majority are women and have had to put up with abuse, barriers and preconceived notions that most men have not. Sexism is real.

These are very good tips from FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force and @CISAgov. Read 'em. And all of this.
ic3.gov/media/2020/200…

RECOMMENDATIONS

- Seek out information from trustworthy sources, such as state and local election officials; verify who produced the content; and consider their intent.
- Verify through multiple reliable sources any reports about problems in voting or election results, and consider searching for other reliable sources before sharing such information via social media or other avenues.
- For information about final election results, rely on state and local government election officials.
- Report potential election crimes—such as disinformation about the manner, time, or place of voting—to the FBI.
- If appropriate, make use of in-platform tools offered by social media companies for reporting suspicious posts that appear to be spreading false or inconsistent information about election-related problems or results.

Hey smart people who work on social media, disinformation, social engineering, etc: are there any examples of malicious actors spreading targeted disinformation via social media with the intention of compelling specific people/people in a specific field to quit or call in sick?

Kate Hammerberg @katehberg · 7h

I'm not sure about calling in sick exactly but def to make it harder to recruit, retain or perform their duties. The huge propaganda campaign against the White Helmets comes to mind. I'm sure there are more so tapping the brain trust:

Today's new FBI/CISA announcement—unusual and hugely important—will get nowhere near the attention it deserves. ic3.gov/media/2020/200…

FOREIGN ACTORS AND CYBERCRIMINALS LIKELY TO SPREAD DISINFORMATION REGARDING 2020 ELECTION RESULTS

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) are issuing this announcement to raise awareness of the potential threat posed by attempts to spread disinformation regarding the results of the 2020 elections. Foreign actors and cybercriminals could create new websites, change existing websites, and create or share corresponding social media content to spread false information in an attempt to discredit the electoral process and undermine confidence in U.S. democratic institutions.

Especially this paragraph

The FBI and CISA urge the American public to critically evaluate the sources of the information they consume and to seek out reliable and verified information from trusted sources, such as state and local election officials. The public should also be aware that if foreign actors or cyber criminals were able to successfully change an election related website, the underlying data and internal systems would remain uncompromised.

Note there is a 2015 precedent for this precise kind of attack (the precedent also did not receive the attention it deserves). From my book ACTIVE MEASURES:

new @USTreasury sanctions out, targeting (yet again) Yevgeny "Putin's chef" Prigozhin and the Internet Research Agency. Interesting that the US is now focusing on Prigozhin's operations in Africa specifically.

Treasury Increases Pressure on Russian Financier

September 23, 2020

WASHINGTON – Today, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) took further action against the network of Kremlin-connected Russian operative Yevgeniy Prigozhin (Prigozhin), by targeting entities and individuals working on behalf of Prigozhin to advance Russia's influence in the Central African Republic (CAR). Concurrently, OFAC is targeting those that have supported the Russian Federal Security Service directly, as well as those that assist persons helping designated Russian actors to evade U.S. sanctions.

"Yevgeniy Prigozhin has an international network of supporters to spread his malign political and economic influence around the globe," said Secretary Steven T. Mnuchin. "The United States will continue to target the ability of Prigozhin to conduct operations globally."

Prigozhin is the leader and financier of the Internet Research Agency (IRA), the Russian troll farm that was first designated by OFAC in 2018. The IRA conducts operations to exacerbate political tensions and divisions in foreign countries, including the United States. Prigozhin is also believed to be the manager and financier of the Russian private military company (PMC) Wagner, an OFAC-designated Russian Ministry of Defense proxy force, which conducts or has conducted dangerous and destabilizing operations in foreign countries, such as Ukraine, Syria, Sudan, Libya, and Mozambique. Because of his involvement in these activities and his connections to the Russian government, Prigozhin is already designated pursuant to Executive Order (E.O.) 13848 (election interference); E.O. 13694, as amended by E.O. 13757 (cyber activity); and E.O. 13661 (activity in Ukraine).

It's especially outlandish because printing fake ballots isn't even something that is done to steal elections in places it would be easier to forge them (in post Soviet space, for instance), and we have many more protections on our system.

Protests continue in Belarus for the 49th straight day. @JoeBiden released a statement last night expressing solidarity with the protestors.

September 25, 2020

Statement by Vice President Joe Biden on the Pro-Democracy Movement in Belarus

For more than six weeks, the people of Belarus have courageously stood up to a dictator to demand their democratic rights and freedoms. Rather than accept their calls for new elections, Alexander Lukashenka has met these peaceful expressions of freedom with brutal violence [illegible] by unleashing his thugs to beat, detain, torture, rape, and disappear protestors exercising their basic right of free expression.

On Wednesday, Lukashenka inaugurated himself in a sham ceremony that democracies around the world refused to recognize, while keeping leaders like Svetlana Tikhanovskaya and Maria Kolesnikova in exile or prison. Yet President Trump refuses to speak out against Lukashenka's actions or to offer his personal support for the pro-democracy movement.

A president hiding in fear from his own citizens, refusing to accept the will of the people is a sign of a weak, illegitimate autocrat, not a strong leader. The people of Belarus deserve when a platform decides something full-on breaks the rules it's sometimes obscured by a more intrusive label or removed but the vast majority of misinformation operates in this gray zone where it's allowed and sometimes paired with a little info label a lot of these labels apply to all posts on a topic at large and aren't even intended to target misinformation or stuff that breaks rules, they're just supposed to point everybody toward good info but who even notices them?

This is interesting. But it still looks at info ops from a tactical approach, ignoring cumulative and strategic effect. As long as we continue to look at these operations as discrete, we'll continue to miss their broader impact.

Ben Nimmo @benimmo

One of the biggest challenges with influence ops is measuring their impact.

Here's a way to do it.

This is also the reason that targeted, organized harassment of women and minorities online is not adequately addressed- while a single platform campaign might not seem like a "breakout" it certainly is going to have an outsize effect on the victim

It would be cool if @twitter gave a tally of how many tweets a user had deleted for harassment, hate speech, or manipulated media, so that it is easier to see those who are contributing to "healthy conversation" and those who aren't.

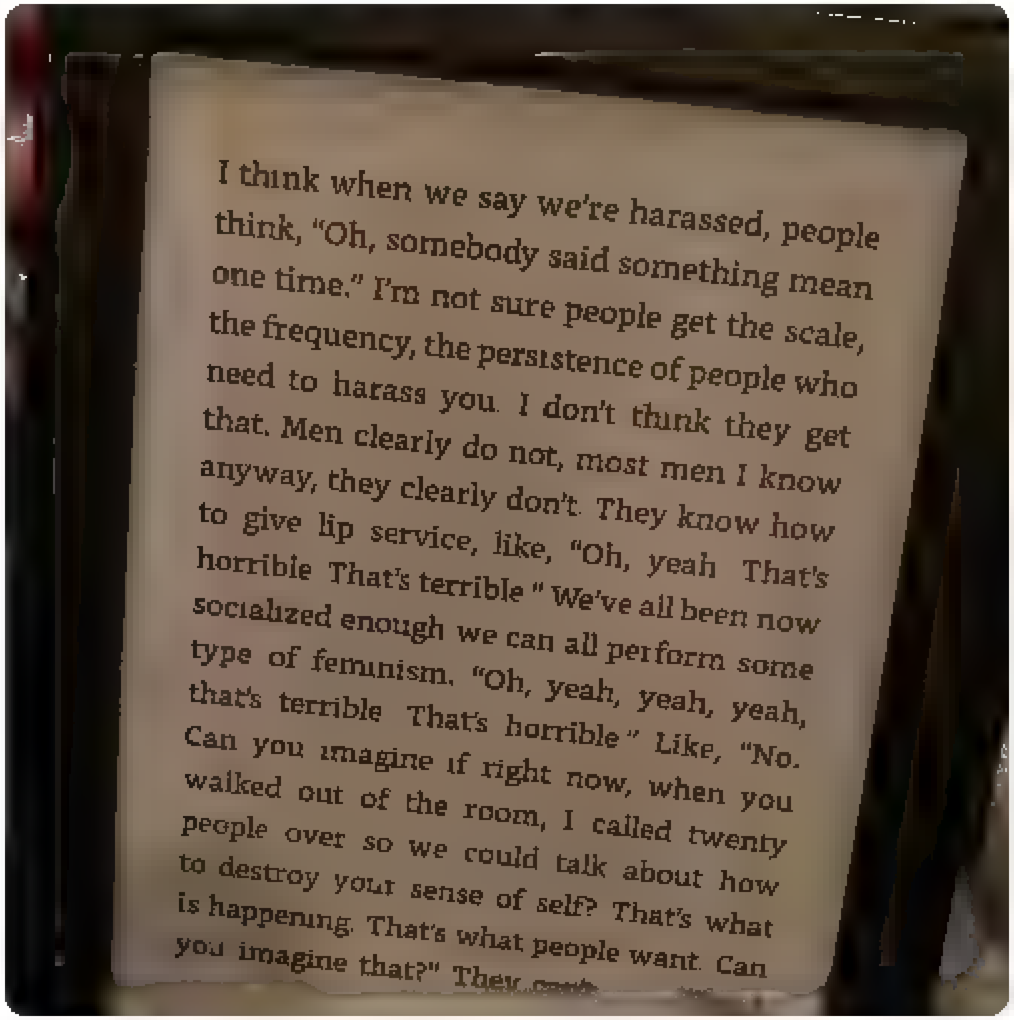
Hello, accurately describing my experiences attempting to commiserate with the men in my life about online abuse:



I think when we say we're harassed, people think, “Oh, somebody said something mean one time.” I'm not sure people get the scale, the frequency, the persistence of people who need to harass you. I don't think they get that. Men clearly do not, most men I know anyway, they clearly don't. They know how to give lip service, like, “Oh, yeah. That's horrible. That's terrible.” We've all been now socialized enough we can all perform some type of feminism. “Oh, yeah, yeah, yeah, that's terrible. That's horrible.” Like, “No. Can you imagine if right now, when you walked out of the room, I called twenty people over so we could talk about how to destroy your sense of self? That's what is happening. That's what people want. Can you imagine that?” They

It doesn't matter if you're dealing with Russian trolls, American, or otherwise: whataboutism and debasing language are their main crutches. It's intellectually lazy and shows they're a lot less committed to "debate" and free expression than they claim.

The persistent Ukraine/Belarus comparisons come across as an intellectually lazy, passive-aggressive scare tactic — the implication being that Trump is an autocrat in need of a "pro democracy" toppling. Trump's style is flawed & warrants criticism, but not like this imo

Trump talking about how he would "put out that fire" in Portland is the language of authoritarianism. It means the violent clearing of protestors, arrest without cause, abuse of human rights. That's now law enforcement, that's lawlessness.

Election observation is not something anyone can simply go and do. It requires training. It requires restraint. The fact that the President is encouraging his supporters to "go and watch" is inviting voter intimidation and potentially violence.

One of the things we look for when we are visiting polling stations in foreign countries is large crowds that are clearly there to agitate for one party or another. This is an indication that something is very wrong, that one group is trying to keep another away from the polls.

I guess I mean an interstitial label covering up the content entirely and creating friction/providing context before the content is uncovered. Downrank would be a good addition.

Lithuanian is literally in a different language group (Baltic) than Russian (Slavic) but ok nyt 🙃

Then there's Lithuania. My paternal grandfather was born in Mazeikiai in 1890. Lithuania will consider you for citizenship if your grandparents were citizens — although this is complicated for me by the fact that when my grandpa was born, the country was still part of the Russian Empire. I just think it's a bit lazy and meant to evoke an "all former Soviet republics are the same" trope. I spent six weeks in Lithuania last year, speak Russian fluently, and barely picked up hello/goodbye/ordering Lithuanian.

Then there's Lithuania. My paternal grandfather was born in Mazeikiai in 1890. Lithuania will consider you for citizenship if your grandparents were citizens — although this is complicated for me by the fact that when my grandpa was born, the country was still part of the Russian Empire. But it's not impossible that this is my last-ditch route to an E.U. passport. Once I'm officially Lithuanian, I could use the E.U. passport to move to — that's right: Ireland! You see? The system works!

But what do I know about Lithuania? The language, for what it's worth, is said to be a lot like Russian. Except harder.

For what it's worth, even when walking alone, I always felt safer in Kyiv than I do in many American cities. These types of crimes are rare and this is really tragic.

Completely agree. I've worked for months, years at a time, in Ukraine, from Kyiv to Lviv, and I've never once felt unsafe. Not in movie theaters, not train stations, not streets at night. I feel WAY safer there than here in the U.S.

It blows my mind, too, that this would happen there, and more so to an American. I'm not sure how great the Kyiv police are at catching murderers, but I know US law enforcement has deals to work with their counterparts in Ukraine for cases like this.

In my state, poll challengers (not observers) can be appointed by a political party and must live in the state. But they would not be called CANDIDATE NAME election poll watchers. So not quite "literally" recruiting volunteers

Looks like (assuming Minnesota is your state per your bio) that your state uses party only, many use per candidate or per ticket. Fairly detailed breakdown for easy scrolling here to get a sense of the variation across the states.

Distressing that in dozens of replies not one mention of the fact that Poll Watchers are a legit function of campaigns. You get training & are permitted in the voting precinct as a representative of the campaign. Lots of shit's gonna go down... this ain't it.

Melissa @melissaabrams · 59 Min
It probably varies from state to state. In my state, poll "challengers" are recruited by the major parties. I haven't seen any candidates recruiting "armies" to watch polls. Seems to be a bit of a difference.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia

The militarization of poll watchers is concerning, as is the suggestion that untrained folks just "go and watch" the polls without proper accreditation (where necessary). Parties both entitled to observers. what Trump suggested last night IMO will lead to intimidation.

So far this morning I've learned that Trump is still sick. That he was reckless, with others' lives as well as his own. And that it may or may not affect the vote.

Going to be a long day...

Agree, but worth also calling out that this effort (like the PeaceData operation from August and others that have come to light) got very little pickup. So while bad actors are trying, defenses in gov, industry, and civil society mean they're not having much success

Oh completely — calling it out makes perfect sense. The callbacks to 20th century IO tactics are fascinating. What's old is new again. And FBI/CISA seem to agree:

This story is personal, but it's not unique; the commonality of this experience is what should worry us all.

I've been saying this since March, but the fact that briefings etc aren't happening virtually and that when they happen in person no one in the White House deigns to model good behavior is truly gross negligence

The fundamental thing about the term "colored revolution," in current usage, is that it presupposes nefarious outside agitators. It absolutely negates the agency of local people who are tired of corruption, lies, and mismanagement. It is a pernicious, ugly slur.
